MAPS Investments Hit $3 Billion

New figures out tonight show Oklahoma City's MAPS Project is turning in big profits for the city. The original plan for MAPS cost the city about $350 million. But 15 years later, studies show that the total value of new investment projects related to maps reached more than $3 billion.

MAPS was behind the Bricktown Ballpark, the Oklahoma River, the Ford Center, and the Bricktown Canal. The initial investment by the community has been returned almost 10 times, and another $2 billion in future growth has already been announced. The Greater Oklahoma City Chamber of Commerce says the impact continues to increase within Oklahoma City's core.

Roy Williams the President of the OKC Chamber of Commerce said, "You build that infrastructure where opportunity could present itself. We don't know what the next 10-20 years brings but if we make some great investments right now we have a chance of capturing those. if we don't make investments there's no chance of that happening."

The chamber says this dramatic renaissance should be great momentum heading into MAPS 3. The next big plan for expansion, MAPS 3, will go to voters December 8th.
